Description of Refactorings:

Our first proposal should require very little refactoring. The test results are already being stored in some capacity so that the html output can be made. We would need only get a hold of that information and pass it to our gui builder instead/additionally. Adding an additional command line argument seems to be supported in the CommandLineArgs class. After getting these two steps accomplished, our add-on doesn't need to interact with the existing code anymore, so no other refactoring should be required.
